The screenshot shows a web browser window for BoltBus with several UI elements and developer tools overlaid.

UI Elements:

- Location Details: Includes fields for Travel Date (06/10/2016) and Passengers (1).
- Special Needs Preferences: Options include "None" and "Edit".
- Trip Grid: A table showing travel times and prices. Most rows have a "Purchase Options" dropdown. The last four rows are labeled "Sold Out".
- Right Sidebar: Promotions for "My Bolt Rewards" and "Get our new mobile app!" (App Store and Google Play).

Developer Tools (Chrome DevTools):

- Network Tab: Circled in red, indicating the focus of the analysis.
- Elements, Console, Sources, Timeline, Profiles, Application, Security Tabs: Other tabs in the DevTools interface.
- Network Panel: Shows a request to "www.boltbus.com" with a status of "OK". The response body contains the HTML code for the header panel of the website.
- Filter Bar: Includes "Filter", "Regex", "Hide data URLs", and dropdowns for "All", "JS", "CSS", "Img", "Media", "Font", "Doc", "WS", "Manifest", and "Other".

Hacking Starbucks for unlimited coffee

This is a story about how I found a way to generate unlimited amount of money on Starbucks gift cards to get life-time supply of coffee or steal a couple of $millions.

So I got an idea to buy 3 Starbucks cards $5 each.

"The unpleasant part is a guy from Starbucks calling me with nothing like 'thanks' but mentioning 'fraud' and 'malicious actions' instead.

Sweet!"
